Bayesian inference questions and answers

I get a surprising number of questions that either (1) I can't answer without knowing much more detail than the reader provides, (2) the reader can answer as easily as I can, or (3) involves asking SmarterTravel.com to do something we don't. Below, you'll find answers to common questions. Reading the answers before asking any of these questions will save you time and help you find the answer for yourself. Where should we go? I would need a 600-page book or an all-day discussion to answer that question in a useful way. To help you, first, I need to know a little more about you: what kind of family or group you have, what kind of interests are your interests, how much time you have, what are your budget goals or your limits, whether you want luxury or simplicity, whether you prefer bright lights or loneliness, what kind of activities you are interested in, what kind of climate you prefer, whether your grandchildren or dog will go with you, and so on. Surprisingly, some readers who ask where to go do not even say where they live and will begin their journey. Sorry, guys, the only way I can help is when you submit questions that are much more specific. If you're absolutely unsure of what you want to do, my best recommendations are that you (1) read a lot of travel publications, (2) connect to a lot of destination websites, and (3) find a good travel agent who is skilled at dealing with issues like this. When should we visit? As with the where question, the best time to visit question depends on how you define the best time: lowest prices, minimum crowds, wider range of activities, warmest/coldest/driest/wettest climate, and so on. From a cost point of view, the answer is almost always in the off-season, but that may not be what you really want. What's the rate? I get this one probably more than any other, and it's a bit surprising. If you're going as far as AskEd and AnswerEd, you're obviously already on SmarterTravel.com. And right there, on our bright new homepage, at the top right, is our own gateway to search for fares: you can search for airfares, hotel, car rental, vacation, and cruise prices. If you don't like our search system, there are dozens more. Don't think we have secret ways to get to air tickets unavailable to you; we don't. We have to go through the same kind of research that you do. If you ask about a trip that the usual U.S.-based search engines don't handle, a good place to go is ETN, where you can submit a trip anywhere in the world and have ticket agents meet with their best deals. And if you start your trip to another country, it's best to find a local discounted travel agency, online or offline, in that country. Can you arrange my trip/sell me a ticket? No. SmarterTravel.com does not organize trips or sell tickets. All tickets. If you're just looking for schedule information, scroll up right to Travel Tools, where one of the options on the drop menu is Flight Schedules. Other Others include a hotel finder and links to suppliers who sell all types of travel. What are the requirements? A lot of readers wonder about the different requirements and limitations, especially on air transport, but also on travel documents. You could answer almost all of these questions by simply googling the question. Here are some of your most common questions: Airline Baggage Limits: Each airline details its online baggage policy. Just log on to the airline's website and look for a link to the baggage. If you don't see it on a drop-down menu, go to the site search or the site map. (Incidentally, when you search, the official term is baggage, not baggage. Baggage is what you buy in a store: When you put your stuff in and take it on a trip, it becomes luggage.) Items allowed in carry-on baggage: The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) maintains a to-do and don't-do list for carry-on baggage. Passport and Visa Requirements: The State Department's travel information home page has one button to obtain information about foreign travel by U.S. citizens and another to obtain detailed passport information. The information button leads to detailed lists of visa requirements to enter any country in the world. Is it safe to visit? No one can answer if you will be safe visiting a foreign country or anywhere in the United States, for that matter. However, the State Department does compile a vast database of countries around the world, including warnings about places to avoid and more general information about what visitors can expect. Click Travel Warnings from the State Department travel page for more information on hot spots, and Consular Information Sheets for other locations. Where should I complain? Most travel providers list an address for complaints, or at least a contact us address, somewhere on their website. You can find them easily. And you can forget to make a lot of stories by sending a registered letter, a return receipt or an express letter to the CEO, it will end up in the same complaint office. The U.S. Department of Transportation (DOT) makes it even easier to voice your airline complaints. Its website lists the current name, snail mailing address, phone and email address for the complaints offices of all major U.S. airlines. If you wish, you can file a complaint with the MINISTERE. And the DOT also detailed information about the rights you make and do not have as an air traveller. Want to improve your reading comprehension? Mastering your inference skills is a great place to start because making inferences is an integral part of understanding what you are reading. Inferences, or evidence-based conclusions about a text, help to unlock meaning and clarify what happens in a passage. Always using evidence to support your reasoning, start drawing conclusions about a passage right away, your understanding will improve considerably accordingly. The following inference questions will give you the opportunity to Muscles. If you need an additional practice afterwards or if you just want to know what an inference is more specifically, try working through the steps to make an inference. Printable PDFs: Practical Questions of Inference 1 Answers to Questions about the Practice of Inference 1 Given that there are so many different approaches to inference and effective strategies for inference, the best way to practice inference is to do so over and over again. Unlike other reading comprehension skills such as understanding vocabulary and identifying the main idea, making an inference will seem different to everyone. That's because when it comes to drawing conclusions, there's not really a right answer. If you are asked a question about a text that you have read thoroughly, just about any inference you make, as long as it is supported by evidence and answers the question in its entirety, can be considered correct. When you master all other areas of reading comprehension and follow a text closely, you will find that the inference comes naturally. These problems are designed to help you draw evidence-based conclusions. The first two are for you. Check your answers to the rest below (Editor's note: there is not a single correct answer to each question, but rather many possible interpretations). Remember, the inference is about reading between the lines. What does the author of each passage want you to understand about what is going on beyond what has been written? I wouldn't eat after this two-year-old if I were you. Inference: The two-year-old man probably did something disgusting for the food you were about to eat or has a cold and you could catch it. Something bad will happen to you if you eat the food. For Valentine's Day, my fantastic neighbor gave his wife a poem that took him about two seconds to write. Sheesh. Inference: My neighbor is not very considerate (and not really fantastic) because he did not take his time to write the poem. A man ran after a retreating bus, frantically waving his briefcase. Inference: If she died, I would not go to her funeral. Inference: Jake almost wished he hadn't listened to the radio. He went to the closet and grabbed his umbrella, even though he would feel stupid to carry it to the bus stop on a sunny morning. Inference: Hey! What happened to all the money from school construction taken from taxpayers? He paid for this toilet the money was flushed down. Inference: As you give a speech to a large audience, you realize that people laugh behind their hands and pointing to the region in your size. Inference: No, darling, I don't want you to spend a lot of money on my birthday present. Having you for a husband is the only gift I need. In fact, I'm just going to drive my old rusty bucket of bolts to the mall and buy myself a little gift. And if the poor old car doesn't break down, I'll be back soon. Inference: A woman enters a hospital clutching her abdomen and yelling at her husband, who hangs behind her a big bag. Inference: You drive on the highway, listening to the radio, and a police officer shoots you more. Inference: 3. A man ran after a retreating bus, waving his briefcase frantically. Inference: The man had to take the bus to work and was late. He wanted the bus driver to stop the bus so he could get on it. 4. If she died, I would not go to her funeral. Inference: I am extremely angry with this woman for a major reason because one of the worst things a person can do is hate someone after they have died. 5. Jake almost wished he hadn't listened to the radio. He went to the closet and grabbed his umbrella, even though he would feel stupid to carry it to the bus stop on a sunny morning. Inference: Jake heard it was going to rain later in the day, but it was hard to believe on a very sunny morning. 6. Hey! What happened to all the money from school construction taken from taxpayers? He paid for this toilet the money was flushed down. Inference: The school district is wasting taxpayers' money. 7. When you give a speech to a large audience, you realize that people laugh behind their hands and point to the area below your waist. Inference: You forgot to zip up your fly or you have something on your pants. 8. No, darling, I don't want you to spend a lot of money on my birthday present. Having you for a husband is the only gift I need. In fact, I'm just going to drive my old rusty bucket of bolts to the mall and buy myself a little gift. And if the poor old car doesn't break down, I'll be back soon. Inference: The wife alludes to her husband that she wants him to buy her a new car for her birthday. 9. A woman enters a hospital, squeezing her abdomen and cursing her husband, who hangs behind her carrying a large bag. Inference: The woman is in labor. 10. You drive on the highway, you listen to the radio, and a policeman shoots you. Inference: You broke the law in one way or another while driving. Conduct.
